Today I met with Homeless Link – a group of 550 organisations working to tackle homelessness across the UK. The average age of death for rough sleepers and those in temporary homeless accommodation in Britain, is just 43 for women and 47 for men and we discussed ways to improve access to healthcare. One my key concerns is the difficulty experienced for some homeless people to register with a GP and we talked over ways to remove the barriers to registration. Casework from my constituency continues to highlight prejudice experienced by people who are homeless.
