Monday 28th sees the House sitting to debate the remaining stages of the Succession to the Crown Bill. You can track the progress of the Bill here.

On Tuesday, I'll be sitting on the Health Select Committee. Later that day, MPs debate and vote on the Lords amendments to the Electoral Registration and Administration Bill. The Totnes constituency, which covers the southern end of Torbay has an electorate of 67,562. It cannot be right that the 76,219 voters living in the north of the Bay are relatively disenfranchised. Will the Lib Dem MP for Torbay protest the injustice that the votes of his constituents carry around 11% less weight? It was a basic Chartist principle that constituencies should be of equal size and it is time for the Liberal Democrats to uphold the principle that everyone's vote should count.

On Wednesday, MPs will have the chance to discuss Europe following David Cameron's speech last week. With the ongoing Eurozone crisis, the European Union is changing. These changes are raising a series of fundamental questions about the future of the EU and Britain's place within it. These questions aren't going away and we should be playing a leading role in shaping the debate. I agree that an in/out referendum on a renegotiated settlement is needed for our partners to renegotiate seriously for Britain to want to stay. You can watch the debate live via the Parliament website. I will not be present at the debate as I will be continuing my work on the draft Care and Support Bill committee.

Business in the House of Commons on Thursday includes a further meeting of the Draft Care and Support Bill; I'll be meeting with Chris Grayling, the Secretary of State for Justice to discuss legal aid and will join a meeting between the Secretary of State and Devon Rape Crisis, a specialist support service for women aged over 18 who live in Devon who have experienced any form of sexual violence, recently or in the past.
