On Monday 4th March, the All Party Cycling Group meets for the final session of the 'Get Britain Cycling' Inquiry. This week the Group considers the role of Government and how we can improve the way cycling is portrayed in the media. I will also be sponsoring an event celebrating the Travelactively Programme on behalf of Sustrans, a leading UK charity enabling people to travel by foot, bike or public transport.

In the Chamber, MPs will vote on the remaining stages of the Justice and Security Bill. The aim of the bill is to provide for oversight of the Security Service, the Secret Intelligence Service, the Government Communications Headquarters and other activities relating to intelligence or security matters. It will also provide for closed material procedure in relation to certain civil proceedings and prevent the making of certain court orders for the disclosure of sensitive information.

On Tuesday, the Health Select Committee will be meeting to take evidence from Sir David Nicholson on the failings in the Mid Staffordshire NHS Foundation Trust between 2005 and 2009 and the report published by Robert Francis QC. Debates in the House of Commons include the Structure of the Ministry of Justice and on the Financing of New Housing Supply. I'll also be attending the 2013 Centre for Mental Health Lecture.

On Wednesday, I will be chairing a Kings Fund and Lloyds Pharmacy event discussing community pharmacies and delivering public health. The All Party Cycling Group meets to sum-up the evidence it has heard in all six Inquiry sessions.

Debates include universal credit and medical imports to the UK and the EU.

Thursday is International Women's Day. I'll be meeting with Parliagender, Parliament's Workplace Equality Network on gender equality. I will also be shadowed by one of my young female constituents as part of the event.
